Six Ways to Help Prevent a Winter Fender Bender

Winter is a tough time to be a driver. Snow and ice are responsible for around 540,000 accidents and 140,000 injuries every year, according to a U.S. Department of Transportation survey of 10 years of weather-related accident statistics. With that in mind, here are six ways you can avoid a winter fender bender, courtesy of Spitzner and Bridgestone.

Be prepared for the worst - Make sure you bring along warm jackets, winter boots, hats and gloves. Your car should also be stocked with a shovel, flashlight (with extra batteries), tow strap and jumper cables.

Put winter tires on your car -In snow and ice, traction is key. And nothing grips the road better in cold temperatures than winter tires. They give you more control and help you stop your car much faster.

Keep your eyes peeled- Look as far down the road as possible and try to spot potential hazards—such as a car on the shoulder or a wayward moose—before they become a problem.

Don't rely on four-wheel drive-Take it easy on slippery surfaces and don't rely exclusively on four-wheel drive to get you out of a sticky situation.

Keep a "safety bubble" around your car-It takes up to 10 times longer to stop on snow and ice than it does on dry pavement, so stay far behind the car in front of you. If someone is on your tail, safely change lanes and let them pass.

Read the terrain like a rally car driver-Ice is a winter driver's worst enemy, so try to identify slippery patches before you hit them. Ice often lurks in the shadows of trees, buildings and billboards. It also forms quickly on bridges and overpasses, so tread carefully when approaching those structures.
